The orchard I'm assisting at is ordering it and I'd like to know more about it (not just what the manufacturer states).

Anyone have any experience with it?

Penn State has been doing some in-depth trials using a number of bio-fungicides including Regalia in recent years -- going back to at least 2016. You can learn about some of those Regalia results via their extension website here or you might consider contacting their lead professor in fruit tree disease management. Her name is Kari Peter and her contact information can be found here.

Their trials may be most pertinent to the Midatlantic region but she may also have colleagues in Washington State and British Columbia who be more regionally helpful to you too.

By the way, I like Arbico as a source for a variety of offerings.

Good luck!

I was sold on giving Regalia a try at the last organic growers meeting here in Feb. I cant really give any feedback on it yet as I have just started using it this season. Im using it, mostly to re inoculate after heavy use of Oxidate 5.0.

Hey I'm a fan of Arbico too! Ive been using the insect predators in my greenhouses for 25 years. I just wish the shipping timing was clearer/better.

I used it a few years ago on our peach trees to help with black/brown rot? (that gummy stuff on the limbs and die-back of may twigs and small branches) I did not notice any difference at all, I'm hoping the Quantum might make a difference this year.
